LRRK2 interaction with 14-3-3 proteins appears to be one of the main modulators of LRRK2 subcellular localization , consistent with the notion that 14-3-3 isoforms principally function by modulating cell localization of binding partners. However, there are no known physiological roles described for the 14-3-3 LRRK2 interaction or impact that 14-3-3-mediated localization may have on LRRK2 functionality, particularly within the endocytic pathway.
